

In this issue

Issue 181 Autumn 2014

Compass

13

Editorial

Reflections in events in Vienna and the future of the rug and textile appreciation

25

Dialogue

Anatolian kilims and ceramics rub shoulders in Germany; kimono-time in the USA; Salor record in Austria Auction Company's third sale; new museums open in Baku, Geneva, Toronto and Milan; changes to the Carpet Design Awards

28

Diary

A selection of international must-see events

33

Calendar

Some of the best fairs, auctions, exhibitions and conferences of the season

34

Thread of time

A 19th-century Welsh patchwork and a 20th-century Moroccan rug, reusing discarded material in very different circumstances

36

Travellers' tales

Rachel Meek

A broad sweep of world history is encountered in Vienna and Budapest on the ICOC and TKF Tour

40

Interview

James McDougall

A conversation with the late, Joe Hajioff, London-based veteran carpet dealer, looking at his Jewish roots and connections with Scotland

43

Comment

Ben Evans

The controversial new installation of carpets from the collection of the MAK in Vienna has generated strong opinions. Following a recent visit, HALI's editor tries to separate the substance from the sound and fury

44

Anatomy of an object

Raoul E. Tschebull

A southwest Caucasian Kazak village rug has elements that seem to support the early interwoven Arabic date inscription

74

Features

58

How the exotic became familiar

Etsuko Iwanaga

The exhibition 'Ages of Sarasa' at Japan's Fukuoka Art Museum deliberately applies the term loosely in order to weave together a thousand years of fabric history. The show's curator outlines its scope and explains how several cultures fed into an ongoing tradition

64

Tibet's tradition in indigo

Thomas Wild

Tibetan rugs have been regarded as existing outside the main traditions of carpet weaving. This, the most complete possible account of manufacture in this region, looks at their distinct identity and their place in the jigsaw of textile history

74

Girding the loins of the Kirdi

Michael Oehrl

Though relatively easy to find and collect, the elaborate 'cache-sexes' of the Kirdi in Cameroon seem only sparsely represented in textile literature. However, there is evidence of a remarkable continuity of production

84

104

36

Reviews

80

Showing a bit of mussel

Brigitte Khan Majlis & Anne Sicken

An unfamiliar and intriguing type of shiny gold-coloured thread discovered in certain Iban Dayak textiles turns out to be shellfish-derived byssus fibre

84

Pattern of islands

Ruth Barnes

The Curator of Yale's Department of Indo-Pacific Art introduces the current exhibition of artefacts from Indonesia and New Guinea. Though the designation 'East of the Wallace Line' is based on a zoological rather than cultural division, the region is united by a taste for complex geometric design

88

Happy squares

Hans König

A connoisseur's view of antique square pile mats with a difference, from the Tarim Basin in China's Xinjiang Uighur Autonomous Region

100

Exhibition reviews

'The Eye of the Needle', the long-awaited first public exhibition of the Feller Collection of 17th-century English embroideries at the Ashmolean Museum in Oxford; 'Woven Languages': Indonesian ikat textiles from the Peter ten Hoopen Collection at the Museu do Oriente in Lisbon; Jewish gold-embroidered hangings 'saved for the nation' by the Rothschild Foundation housed in Waddesdon Manor, an English National Trust property; 'Ottoman Art, 1450-1600. Nature and Abstraction: A glimpse beyond the Sublime Porte', a loan exhibition at a historic palace in Genoa; a curatorial overview of 'From Ashgabat to Istanbul' at the Textile Museum of Canada, Toronto

110

Book reviews

A study of the use of woven bags by settled Turkish nomads across four decades: Bergama Heybe ve Torba. Traditional Bags of the Yürüks in Northwest Anatolia. Observations from 1970 to 2007 is reviewed by Michael Buddeberg

113

Market report

In recent months Middle Amu Darya prayer rugs have been seen in unusually large numbers in London's auction houses. Ralph Kaffel reviews their track record as sale items

121

Auction price guide

Extensive reports from Austria Auction Company's second sale of Fine Antique Oriental Rugs from March 2014, and Rippon Boswell's sale in May 2014; plus carpet highlights from Sotheby's New York, Skinner in Boston and Christie's London, with textile results from Christie's South Kensington

136

Last page

The Peabody Essex Museum in Massachusetts has acquired a collection of 18th-century chintz textiles made for export, due to be exhibited in 2016. Also, a preview of what will be in the next edition of HALI